Food is involved in most of my major life decisions. This includes where to live.

Living close to a variety of restaurants and great grocery stores are key components in my neighbourhood of choice.

Every great neighbourhood has those fun restaurants you can count on for an upbeat scene and delicious food.

Surrey is quickly becoming a hub for delicious eats and the Fleetwood neighbourhood is no exception. Today I showcase a handful of personal favourite restaurants in the Fleetwood community.

Big Ridge Brewing Company is only minutes from TAYLOR.

Number one is the Big Ridge Brewing Company, a kind of upscale sports bar with affordable pricing. The BRBC is a member of the Mark James Group family of restaurants which are known for their upbeat, trendy atmosphere and yummy pub style food.

Check out their great menu here. They just opened a new location at 5580 152nd Street.

My second pick would have to be the Iron Grill Teppanyaki Steakhouse. The Iron Grill is fairly new to the Fleetwood neighbourhood and is located at 15940 Fraser Hwy.

The Iron Grill is a fun place for group parties.

You get to watch an amazing meal being cooked right in front of you while enjoying the entertainment of a fire roaring high and knives being juggled right before your eyes.

The menu is a little pricier than a typical night out at the White Spot but a fun alternative to the usual Friday night.

Next is Yoko Sushi & Noodle House at 16013 Fraser Highway – right around the corner from TAYLOR. Yoko Sushi won me over after I had their teriyaki don. Its location is easily accessible and the service is awesome.

Yoko Sushi is known for their fresh and consistently delicious sushi & noodles.

With very affordable prices, Yoko is truly a local gem. We don't have a digital copy of their menu to show you but feel to call them at  (604) 507-5575  for more information.

The long-awaited Ashford Model Home opens this Saturday, September 18th at TAYLOR. This home has been beautifully furnished by our interior designers to give you a sense for how the space comes together with furniture and personal touches.

New TAYLOR Model Home - come check it out!

As shown here, the Ashford Model Home has a very contemporary design to it. This aligns with MOSAIC's focus on designing homes with classic, timeless exteriors and modern, contemporary interiors; what we believe to be the best of both worlds.

It's not an industry staple, but we do it anyway. At TAYLOR, we include custom features like art niches of varying size and shape built right in to your walls. TAYLOR Rowhomes feature subtle niches that showcase your personality.

We're always evolving and improving our design. At TAYLOR the niches are taller and deeper than our previous designs and in new and tastefully surprising places . We get a lot of positive feedback on these unique design features and people always appreciate the clever utility these add.

In my previous MOSAIC home, we had a niche at the top of our 2nd stairway going up to the bedroom level, along with one in our living room acting as a TV niche. If I can be a little biased, I'm going to quote my husband: "Little details like this are what make MOSAIC stand out from the cluttered market of cookie cutter townhomes. They enable you to design your home, your way, with a distinct, personal style."

As a current MOSAIC townhome owner, I have to say that I LOVE the tandem garage. Prior to becoming homeowners, my husband and I have always had the type of parking arrangements where our vehicles were parked in an outside parking stall, or even on the street.

The Tandem Garage at TAYLOR

It didn't seem overly annoying at the time (except for all the ice scraping, snow brushing, defrosting, etc.) as it was just something you "had to do", but after moving into our home with the tandem gara as!

Now we get to enjoy the comforts of just starting up the car and going with no fuss, no need to brave the outside elements first thing in the morning before we are even awake, and best of all, the car is never freezing cold! An additional bonus, our dogs get to jump right in – there's no need to put them on leashes and walk them out onto the street to get into the car.

The Tandem garage provides tons of space for all of your needs!

Now those are just conveniences, what you also get is a ton more storage space! We've got enough room to safely store our patio furniture, doggy swimming pool, Christmas decorations, deep freezer and beverage fridge, sports equipment, and garbage and recycling bins (just to name a few...).

I love it, my husband loves it, and I think you'll love it too.

The Debate: Brick vs Stone

September 3rd, 2010

Peter

Go to comments

Leave a comment

Variety is the spicy meatball of life. Who doesn't like options? It is with this in mind that we talk about a relatively new addition to our exterior design that we are very excited about: STONE. We tried it out for the first time on select townhomes at KNOLL and it was met with huge success so now we are bringing it to a chosen few homes at TAYLOR.

MOSAIC's signature brick exteriors originate from the influences of the Georgian style architecture that is widely found in Montreal, Toronto, and Boston. Historically, brick and stone were used on the more expensive homes in prestigious neighbourhoods and we've had the desire to re-create that here on the Westcoast.

With the addition of our stone exteriors, we are able to provide our homeowners with yet another choice to reflect their personal taste and lifestyle. We love the richness in the texture and colour that the new stone gives off, plus it gives you a nice traditional alternative to the brick.

A lot of thought has gone into the process of picking the stone that we are using. The particular stone we have chosen is called "Ledgestone". It has a nice warm colour which is perfect for our climate as it looks good in both sunny and cloudy weather.

A self-proclaimed Martha Stewart in the making, I LOVE entertaining.

The Ashford allows people to socialize and move easily between the kitchen and dining area while meals are prepared.

B C C O N D O S . N E T

Also, when I am cooking I tend to make a big mess so I need a lot of space. The Ashford kitchen has more counter space than you would typically see in a Rowhome.

The open L shaped kitchen gives me tons of counter space to work with.

Finally, I am a bit of a pack-rat (throw away my grade six journals?!?! Never!) and need storage like nobody's

The Ashford plan gives the flexibility to use the ample garage space to suit my needs which are: STORAGE. Using the handy Rubbermaid storage system, (a very worthwhile investment!) I can not believe how much stuff can be stored in the tandem garage.

I would be lost with my Rubbermaid bins.

A Space Modulator?

 August 13th, 2010  Peter

Yes, every MOSAIC home really does have at least one space modulator in it. After our recent post about thoughtfully designed drywall features, some people asked us what exactly space modulators were and what was so thoughtful about them. We would love to be able to announce that we're starting an aerospace division, but our obsession with home design is taking up too much of our time.

A drywall space modulator along the ceiling and wall separates the dining room and

B C C O N D O S . N E T

There are a lot of advantages to an open contemporary floorplan; an abundance of natural light, an enhanced feeling of spaciousness, and greater livability to name a few. The biggest design pitfall that builders can fall into when designing open floorplans is poor definition of space. At MOSAIC, we have been designing these homes since our inception and have been obsessively refining space planning through the design of hundreds of homes.

Another dining/kitchen modulator from KEW. Note the slightly bulkier size of this earlier

The result is a series of design features that serve to modulate space in our floorplans; allowing kitchen, dining room, and living room to occupy the same area while maintaining a clear definition of the boundaries, style, and utility of these living spaces.

In every townhome that has bathrooms on the top floor, there are mechanical spaces that contain plumbing needing to travel to the ground floor. While some builders will simply try to blend these into existing space using fancy model homes, we celebrate them and integrate them into our space modulators.

TAYLOR Townhome Chartwell Plan kitchen

In the end, we hope that our buyers and home owners don't notice our use of space modulators because these are part of a set of design features that make a space feel and function better, while blending in to the background.

There are many more features in our homes that our TAYLOR Sales Team would be happy to tour you through and point out to you, so feel free to call us today to make a tour appointment:   604.584.1114

The Insides and Outsides of Windows

June 11th, 2010

Peter

Go to comments

If you've seen a MOSAIC community before, you may have noticed that windows are hugely important to the overall design. They make for a rich and elegant exterior and also do a great job of enhancing interior living spaces.

Natural light is one of the most valuable features of a home; the home you buy either has it or it doesn't and it is a very difficult thing to add. Using pictures of previous communities, I've outlined below what we do to make sure that the windows of your home bring in the right amount of natural light and look great doing it.

B C C O N D O S . N E T

Placement

Step back and take a moment to look at windows of any home and notice how much of an impact they make. They need to impart a sense of balance and weight on a home's facade. By taking great care, we line up windows on one floor with windows on floors below and above, with adjacent sills and sashes, and with the other architectural detailing on the front of the home resulting in an exterior that has windows in all the right places. The largest challenge is ensuring that what makes sense for the exterior, is also right for the interior. Interior windows need to center living spaces, lending ample light where needed and limiting light where it is unwanted.

Size and Shape

While often dictated by placement, much consideration has to be given to the size and shape of a window to ensure that it is not only highly functional, but also proportionally correct. Does it suit the room? Does the shape complement the exterior? Is it historically accurate to the architectural style? There are lots of dos and don'ts with window placement and sizing and a carefully considered home will have that indescribable "feeling" that everything is just as it should be.

Function

Windows provide air and light, at the same time they define space. The windows at TAYLOR open to allow for the free exchange of air (there is one exception in some end unit garages). They've also been sized to allow as much light as possible into each room. In many cases, you'll also notice that windows are placed to dictate the use of room, either to center a living room, dining room, or create an anchor for a kitchen.

Finish

A plain old unfinished window can be a major detractor on a home's facade. By dressing the sills and adding shutters in the Georgian Colonial tradition, we add richness to the individual windows and to the facade overall. On the insides of our windows on the main floor, we finish the outer edges with an elegant casing and sill treatment; we feel any picture that appears through our windows deserves a handsome frame. Taking the extra step of finishing the main floor windows with 3 inch wood trim painted in a low gloss white makes a huge difference.

So next time you look at or out a MOSAIC window, we hope you recognize the difference that the extra care and attention makes.

There are many examples of exceptional window design online, an impressive portfolio of local (and not so local) window designs can be found at BC's very own Dynamic Architectural Windows and Doors Website: Click here to view

Whatever Reggie and Virginia Bonilla paid for packing boxes this year, they've got their money's worth.

Before they wed in May, the two – both in their late 20s – were living in their respective family homes in the Fleetwood area of Surrey. Afterwards, the newlyweds moved into a three-bedroom suite in the basement of Virginia's parents' house. It had a perfectly nice kitchen, living area, and sleeping quarters, but it was only intended to be a temporary measure.

"After our wedding, we looked at each other and said, 'we're grown-ups now, we probably have to pay a mortgage!'" Virginia says with a laugh.

The Bonillas work in downtown Vancouver. They searched for homes in Burnaby, but everything seemed to be above their price range. Then, after figuring out that the commute between Surrey and Vancouver was doable, they refocused their attention on Fleetwood.

"There's a sense of safety and cleanliness here compared to other parts of Surrey," explains Virginia. "The individual houses are well-maintained, and it's comfortable and welcoming – almost quaint."

In July, the Bonillas went to an open house at the Taylor development, which is being built by MOSAIC Homes. Virginia says it was love at first sight.

"It's a combination of everything: the Georgian-style exterior with all of the brick, the open concept – there are no walls obstructing your lines of view – and the size of the rooms."

They decided to purchase a 1,400-square-foot two-bedroom-and-den row home, which they think will be more than enough room even if their family expands to include children.

They'll be using those trusty packing boxes once again to move in later this year.

The Bonillas took advantage of a standard practice from developer MOSAIC: it usually has construction fairly complete before commencing sales. They picked an end unit, and know they'll have a view of the amenity area from their bedroom and the den, and that the visitor's parking area visually separates them from the home across the way. Their balcony will face the neighbour's garage, rather than another balcony, which could have made for less privacy during the summer months.

"We like to call it 'real homes for real people' – they're buying walls and a roof, not just looking at floor plans," explains Peter Edmonds, spokesperson for MOSAIC. "People buying off plans don't get to see all of the details. Here, what you see is what you get."

The company prides itself on attention to detail, incorporating feedback from past buyers to continue refining the design of its homes. (This is its fifth project in as many years in Surrey, although the first in Fleetwood.) Stairways between the different levels of the row homes have cut-outs to improve sightlines – so that there are no collisions in high-traffic areas. Wall space in the show home's garage has been decorated with shelving for shoes and hooks for hats and coats, after past buyers indicated that would make for a good use of space. The inclusion of kitchen islands is also based on consumer demand.

Landscaping has been placed to delineate individual entryways for homes, and the colour schemes between the individual blocks of row homes have been varied to reinforce that sense of individuality. Small black rail fences also define public-versus-private space, and some of the drainpipes trailing down the brick-clad exterior walls are faux rather than functional, which creates a sense of symmetry.

Outside balconies are spacious, stretching nearly the full width of each home, and easily accommodating four chairs and an outdoor table. Inside, a number of niches tucked into walls that would otherwise be blank provides convenient display space for artwork or sculptural elements. As well, the light fixtures have already been strategically angled to light them properly. Bedrooms have been designed with specific areas for dressers in between closets, or to have just the right dimensions in one spot to place bunk beds.

The washer and dryer are on the second floor to make laundry more convenient, and attention has been paid to ensure light fixtures and wall outlets are aligned and symmetrical, whenever possible.

The developer also focused on affordability, relying on long-term relationships with its trades, to keep costs manageable. Price flexibility has been built into the garage, where people can opt to have it finished or unfinished, depending on what they're willing to spend.

"Attention to detail is a huge focus for all 60 of the people at our company, not just those who deal directly with design or marketing," says Edmonds. "I've had someone from accounting tell me before about details that were missed!"

MOSAIC worked for approximately seven years to find land in Fleetwood for a project, drawn by proximity to Highway One, and easy access to schools – Holy Cross high school is across the street from Taylor, and an elementary school is just down the road.

Taylor appears to be pretty much everything Virginia Bonilla wanted. Since that first open house in July, she's been back a few times for tours held by the company to explain its design philosophy.

She's delighted by the attention to detail, saying it fits with her 'type-A personality.' Bonilla is already envisioning pictures of the couple's wedding and travels in the wall niches, and has measured and re-measured rooms to make sure new furniture purchases will fit.

"I needed to go back to see if there were soap dishes in the shower, or would we need to buy some, and I couldn't remember if there were two sinks in the kitchen or just one," she admits. "The fact that they're confident enough to show people the actual homes as they're going through construction – it's very comforting to me, and a sign our money's been well spent."

The Bonillas are expecting to move in at the end of this month to begin the next phase in their lives together – and are hoping they won't have to move again for a long, long time.

In July, the Bonillas went to an open house at the Taylor development, which is being built by MOSAIC Homes. Virginia says it was love at first sight.

"It's a combination of everything: the Georgian-style exterior with all of the brick, the open concept — there are no walls obstructing your lines of view — and the size of the rooms."

They decided to purchase a 1,400-square-foot two-bedroom-and-den row home, which they think will be more than enough room even if their family expands to include children.

They'll be using those trusty packing boxes once again to move in later this year.

Only Georgian outside, the Taylor homes in Surrey's Fleetwood neighbourhood greet residents and passersby with exteriors that are a homage to an architectural and aristocratic style that is almost 300 years old. The homes' interiors, however, are a vigorous demonstration of the open-plan principal; living quarters championed by another middle-class style — Craftsman in the United States and Arts and Crafts in the U.K.
