Tentative completion: Fall 2008

When built, the Coast homes will assert a signpost purpose as splendid as their location at the intersection of Chancellor Boulevard and Marine Drive, the University of B.C. divinity schools above articulation of a foundational component of Western learning and the ocean and mountains below and beyond articulation of the foundational components of West Coast residency.

The attenuated terraces of the upper-floor apartments will be the critical architectural contribution to the homes' assertive possession of site.

Firstly, they will be figurative steps that will lead, or walk, the eye of the passerby below the buildings up to the campus above the buildings.

Secondly, the terraces and the extensive glazing and the many balconies will immediately identify the homes as view homes, whether seen by a passerby above or below the buildings.

Thirdly, the terraces will be a robust response by developer and architect to regulatory direction, in an official plan governing the transformation into a residential neighbourhood of a chunk of campus between, to the south, the Gage Towers and the law school and to the north, Chancellor Boulevard and between, to the east, Wesbrook Mall and to the west, Marine Drive.

"The form of development will provide a stepping of density with lower density and height along Chancellor Boulevard and Wesbrook Mall to higher density and two towers adjacent to the Gage residences and the George Curtis (law) building," the Theological Neighbourhood Plan directs.

The Coast "steps" have strongly influenced the approach to market of the Bastion development company and the organizer of the Coast sales campaign, MAC Marketing Solutions.

"Because the buildings step so dramatically, every terraced home is [at] the top of a building. There's nobody above you," MAC's Cameron McNeill says. "So, really, every terrace is a penthouse."

At $4 million, one of the "penthouse terrace homes" -- the developer's appellation for the top-of-building apartments, Bastion's Kim Maust reports -- is the most expensive new homes Bastion and MAC have brought to market, Maust and McNeill say.

The penthouse atop a highrise apartment-building that Bastion is building above the theological colleges sold for $3.5 million, Maust says. "We've done a lot over $3 million, but I don't believe we've broken $4 million," McNeill says.

To linger over the Coast penthouses is to mis-report the variety of the residency opportunity on sale at the new home project.

There are, for example, 14 studios for sale, the $368,800 price on the least expensive less than the 10-per-cent deposit on the most expensive.

"We call them campus suites," Maust says. "They're work/study units that UBC encourages. They need to be attached to another strata lot. So they are units that could be used as a guest suite for an out-of-town visitor or visitors. They could be used by an adult student who is a member of a family with a home in Coast. They could be rented out."

"Mingler" homes are also for sale, homes in which at least two of the bedrooms have their own ensuites.

In these homes, the return of one member of the household after a late night in the library -- or the pub -- is not automatically a wake-up call for every other member of the household.

The average square-foot price of a Coast apartment is about $700, McNeill and Maust say. "Some [prices] are a lot higher than that average number. Some [are] quite a bit lower," McNeill says. "It's almost , perhaps, more fair to say a city home might average $600 and a terrace home $800 plus ..."

That much range in the pricing of a new home project does ask a question: What do the homes at Coast have in common (besides at law leasehold and strata status)?

Maust identifies the outdoor-living opportunity flagged by a wall in the presentation centre, a wall of overheight glass doors through which residents of the terrace homes, in the fullness of time, will pass between the outdoor and indoor components of their homes.

McNeill points to location. "I can't over-state the importance of the neighbourhood itself. Anyone residing in Chancellor Place is automatically a 'member' of a prestigious, very tranquil neighbourhood."

COAST

NATURAL HABITAT FOR MODERN LIFE.

On the coast of Vancouver at UBC, where modern minds converse, it is still possible to experience the city's rarest luxury – living in nature.

Here, life opens up to welcome the gift of infinite sky, with expansive yet secluded access to nature's inspirations. With architecture equal to its exceptional surroundings, Coast is a final opportunity to own a home in this highly sought-after community of historic and distinguished westcoast homes.

ARCHITECTURE EQUAL TO LIFE.

In a city known for nature and architecture, there may be no equal to either. Coast's contemporary design exhilarates with a dramatic strength of character achieved through bold contrast of substance and lightness. Yet it is also a testament to the architectural purpose is to magnify nature superbly.

LIFE IN FULL VIEW.

At Coast, outdoor living receives the attention and space it deserves.

Every home embraces its own generous private outdoor space, framed by special campus views – such as the Chan Centre, Cecil Green Park, the Vancouver School of Theology, and trees and more trees.

For conversation or contemplation, the outdoors at Coast is a seamless, spacious extension of home. Look northwest to Howe Sound, the North Shore and the city, with soothing gradations of mountains beyond. Look southwest to Georgia Strait and the Gulf Islands.

Closest views reward as well, overlooking richly treed and gardened

INTERIORS EQUAL TO WESTCOAST LIFE.

Each Coast interior plan is highly considered, integrating substance and natural beauty with the building's transcendent architecture. Kitchens of meticulous quality include panelled refrigerators from Sub-Zero, and Miele cooktops and wall ovens. Strong clean lines and solid materials reveal simplicity's point of bringing ease and pleasure to each task. Every home is anchored by natural elements such as limestone, granite and wood. In the bedrooms, surfaces are plush and inviting, with baths by Kohler and Neptune. Lavish European treatments and technical sophistication are evident throughout.

the most attractive feature of the Coast neighbourhood is the neighbourhood itself. Right next door are internationally celebrated cultural destinations – the Chan Centre for the Performing Arts and the Museum of Anthropology, with the much-loved Cecil Green Park, Frederick Wood Theatre and more nearby. There is much to do, yet often it is enough just to be here.

Walk the mature and refined boulevards gently scalloping down the slopes of UBC's most prestigious community – every outing a fresh garden tour. See it every day for the first time. Venture further to beaches extending for miles in both directions. Explore, on foot or pedal, remarkable forest and coastal paths in Pacific Spirit Park, Nitobe Gardens and the Botanical Gardens. And in mere minutes by car, shop and dine in the West 10th

A contemporary gas fireplace within the South Terrace is centered on an aluminum custom door set which fully retracts to bring the outside in.

MASTER BEDROOM east facing Villas

This artist's rendering features the east-facing Villa Master Bedroom. Large picture windows provide views to the North Shore Mountains. A glazed door leads to a private terrace featuring an outdoor fireplace. The Master enjoys ample closet space and a beautiful four piece ensuite bathroom.

SOUTH TERRACE

Each Villa features the spacious South Terrace seamlessly flowing from the Family Room. Imported rose-taupe slate with a slip resistance surface provides the base material for this private sun-drenched enclave. The gas fireplace acts as an inviting centerpiece for relaxed entertaining. Raised landscaped planters with Japanese Maples offer colour and privacy. The outdoor kitchen features a gas barbeque and storage below protected with stainless steel fronts.
